DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

1. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

2. Claims 12-20 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over LaFeuille (US. Pat. No. 1,023,157) in view of DeLemme (US. Pat. No. 1,995,966).

LaFeuille discloses all that is recited in the claims (see pages 1,2 and fig. 2) except it may not state that the rotary drier, disclosed in its invention, may also be used to humidify material, by delivering to said material moisture. However, its known, that rotary driers can also be utilized as "conditioning" machines which, generally, subject substances to the action of fluids, liquid or gas, in order to dry or humidify materials. Such an apparatus is disclosed in DeLemme (see entire document). Therefore, it would have been obvious to one having ordinary skill in the art at the time of the invention to utilize the apparatus of LaFeuille to perform the method of humidifying materials, as claimed, since rotary driers can also be used as rotary "humidifiers", as is reflected in the DeLemme reference.

Regarding claim 13, one having ordinary skill in the art would have optimized the application amount/location of moisture, through routine experimentation, in order to ensure complete and thorough humidification of the treated material.

Art Unit: 1731

Regarding claim, 14, one having ordinary skill in the art would have delivered to the material liquid in the form of atomized droplets, since this is conventionally the form in which liquid substances are delivered to material to be humidified, i.e. from a nozzle/sprayer.

Regarding claim 17, it would have been obvious to one having ordinary skill in the art at the time of the invention to operate each cylinder with separate drives in order to permit variances in rotational speeds, if desired, in order to affect the quantity of moisture in the treated material.

Regarding claim 18-19, it would have been obvious to correlate the rotational speeds/directions of the cylinders so that they are the same after routine experimentation to determine the optimal speeds of both drums in effectively humidifying material.

Regarding claim 20, absent any statements to the contrary, it is presumed that in the method of LaFeuille modified by DeLemme, the treated material is conveyed from the inlet to the outlet ends of the drum due to a slight decline in the apparatus, i.e. via gravity. However, in the alternative, this would have been an obvious feature of the method of the combined references in order to effectively advance the conveying of treated material and, hence, the treatment of same.

Conclusion

3. The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure.
